Illustration of pay

The following illustrations use real numbers against defined rates of pay, based on working 37½ hours per week, over a two-week period (as we pay fortnightly) to show you how the pay and deductions are calculated for each rate given. We have used Tax Code 1257L and Full Rate (A) National Insurance in the calculations; further, these illustrations include pension contributions assuming you have been automatically enrolled after 12 weeks work, as per the current regulations.

You will not necessarily be paid at any of the rates of pay shown below when you are assigned work; these are illustrations to show what your net pay would likely be if you were on an assignment at one of these rates, using the above assumptions. To be clear, the hourly rate you are paid may be different to these illustrations, and you may work different hours than shown, however the deduction elements will be the same, calculated against your own actual rate of pay, hours worked, tax code, national insurance category and pension status.
